

True delicatessens follow a time consuming, labor intensive process of meat preparation that predates refrigeration. In fact KATZ's is proud to follow the same methods of smoking, pickling, spicing and curing that was first used when the store opened in 1888 on Ludlow St.

At the time, the Lower East Side was teeming with new immigrants and KATZ's was soon a focal point for congregating. Going to KATZ's for a Friday dinner of specials (knockwurst) and beans quickly became a neighborhood tradition. The delicatessen's reputation for recreating the flavors of the Old World created a loyal following continuing through generations to come.

In the early 1900's KATZ's, which was originally located on the east side of Ludlow moved to the other side of Ludlow because of the construction of the Subway. Incidentally, Augustus C. Ludlow was an American Naval hero of the war of 1812. It was to Ludlow that Captain James Lawrence uttered the famous words "Don't give up the ship".

The present section of the store where the counterman are slicing was added in 1946 to accommodate the hungry crowds, Houston (pronounced how-ston) street was named for William Houston, a Georgian delegate to the Continental Congress.

"Send a Salami to Your Boy in the Army"™ originated in World War II when the three sons of the owners were overseas and the family tradition of sending food to their sons sealed the famed KATZ's slogan.
